

Is someone you know considering a PULSE year?

Young adults who are considering a year of service are doing something very countercultural. These young people are examining how their education, passion and core beliefs might best be used in service to our world.

A year of PULSE service is not paid work, but it does provide real-world work experience. If someone you know – your daughter, son, former student or other cherished young person – is considering a PULSE year, know that she or he will gain maturity and professional skills while making a lasting difference in the lives of others.

Your peace of mind is important. Be assured that all PULSE volunteers receive ongoing support from members of the Marianist Family – familiar faces and new ones – throughout their PULSE year.

Benefits of Marianist PULSE:

- Monthly living stipend
- Room and board
- Eligibility for Federal Loan Deferment
- Healthcare
- Paid travel to Dayton for orientation
- Local transportation
- Social service agency experience
- Networking with the Marianist organizations and ministries
- End-of-year financial allocation

You may find these articles helpful:

Gap Year After High School or College Graduation

Another Option for New High School and College Graduates

Do you really need to get a job right after you graduate?

A Church In The Streets

Six 20-somethings in D.C. will give up many comforts of modern life for a year to serve the sick and the poor, a nod to the pope's teachings

If you have questions or would like to connect with a former PULSE volunteer, please email us at PULSE@marianist.us